Admiral Sims and the Scots

Admiral Sims, like more than one sailor, has the knack of telling a story well and what he has to say in The World's Work is of very great interest strategy and purely professional matters, though naturally it does not deal with the abstract theories as do the great works of Mahan. On the other hand, there is much that is pleasant to read and that has nothing to do with depth charges and column formations and a good deal to do with the Scots, who appear to have made good friends with the young American sailors. And when one reads of Inverness and the Black Isle and the Salvaging Khaki Firth and Culloden, one goes straight back to Walter Scott. There are worse things in the world than waking off nal flags.

Case Regarded as Typical

The Tolsky case is regarded as typical of a majority of the cases of the apprehension and subsequent deportation of undesirables. Mr. Tolsky was one of 60 persons arrested last November in a Department of Justice raid on a Detroit hall. In his possession was found a copy of an announcement of meetings to be held by the Union of Russian Workers. He had been found selling the union's literature, and a copy of its manifesto was found among the books he was selling. Mr. Tolsky was held in $10,000 bail and with 35 others removed to Ellis Island, reaching there too late to be deported on the Buford. On motion for a writ of habeas corpus made by Swinburne Hale, Judge Hand made his decision, which protects Mr. Tolsky from being deported merely because he is suspected of being a member of the Union of Russian Workers.

There has been a marked change in the attitude of the courts toward offenders driving under the influence of liquor. Fewer cases are being placed on file and convictions are increasing under the law which permits both fine and confinement on the first offense. A large and general increase in the amount of the fine imposed is also noted in the majority of cases of this nature.

The committee appointed by Mr. Goodwin to draw up plans for a statewide highway safety campaign has been divided into committees on finance, organization and publicity. It is planned to raise $25,000 from among the insurance companies and dealers' associations, and conduct an ably organized and advertised drive throughout the State.

than are ruling today, and merchants are glad to get these at the values formerly fixed. The output is chiefly n fine cheviots and saxonies, those who are still making worsteds having great difficulty in getting the necessary yarns from the English spinners who for some time past have been inlined to pay little attention to the requirements of Scottish manufacturers who have tried to keep up this class of trade.

Woolen Tweeds Prices

Scottish Makes in Demand

There is a strong impression that indicated, manufacturers generally ment is to be made by August 1. have yet several months' work before them. There has certainly been an abnormal demand for Scottish makes, and there is a strong belief that as result of the combined efforts that have been made to push these pure woolen goods, the demand for the same will continue when competition from abroad becomes keener. Manufacturers are naturally averse to speculating to any extent in the purchase of wools. From Jan. 1—

Financial reasons may have something the purchase of wools. thing to do with this because material 5,944,865 is from four to six times dearer than *746,859 in pre-war times so that it is difficult to finance stocks.

Hosiery and underwear manufacturers are busy for the moment, but the outlook has peculiar elements about it. The high prices for all kinds of fine-fashioned goods is certainly militating against new business, and there have been additional cancellations of summer orders for underwear. Merchants appear to be hardening themselves against a laying-in of stock at values which customers are averse to give.

Underwear Prices High

The wholesale manufacturers are not so much affected as the retail makers, because their deliveries are made earlier, but it is just possible that wholesale merchants who have received supplies may find a difficulty in disposing of their stocks which were ordered at a time when it was customary to place orders as large as manufacturers would accept. The prices of the best makes of underwear are becoming well-nigh ladies' combinations, for instance, will cost about £2 a garment. Manufacturers plead that charges have to be high, because of the rise in the wages and material, and they are paying 20s. a pound for some yarns which formerly cost 2s. 9d. a pound. Silk mixtures and spun silk are abnormally dear, and difficult to obtain, America being credited with virtually having made a corner in silk.

A STATEMENT TO PUBLIC

By JOHN R. McVEY

President of the Old South Trust Company

The Old South Trust Company will resume business next Saturday morning. It has stood the acid test. It will reopen a bigger and better bank. It will have a larger capital and surplus than it previously had, and its managing board will be composed of clear-headed, solid and substantial business men and bankers, headed by former Governor Samuel W. McCall.

The bank is solvent. It has always been solvent. State and national bank examiners have certified to this.

The bank is strong. It has a paid-in capital of $500,000.00, and has resources of over three million dollars.

It is liquid. During the past few months the assets of the bank were made as liquid as possible, and today no bank in Boston is more liquid. A liquid bank is the strongest kind of a bank.

It is a safe bank. It has gone through a fine tooth comb investigation by two Bank Commissioners and one National Bank Examiner, and the permit to reopen granted by the Bank Commissioner speaks more eloquently of its strength than any words of mine.

I am proud of the vindication of the Old South Trust Company and am grateful to the loyal stockholders and depositors whose patience and confidence gave me the courage in trying days to fight for the reopening of the bank. I am sure the same loyalty which led them to give ungrudging support to the bank in the past, will lead them to continue their support and loyalty in the prosperous times ahead.

In the days just passed there was need of a big-hearted, sagacious counsellor, and him I found in Simon Swig, vice-president of the Tremont Trust Company.

My efforts to reopen the bank without the co-operation of the Bank Commissioner, the depositors, the stockholders and others would have been futile, and to them and to all others who have in any way assisted, I express my heartfelt thanks and appreciation.

PLANS FOR NEW CHICAGO HARBOR

Special to The Christian Science Monitor n its Western News Office CHICAGO, Illinois-Plans for a harbor on Lake Calumet, on the south side of Chicago, have been submitted to the city council by the city harbor engineer, Arend A. Vlissingen. If the P. 4540 lans are adopted, Lake Calumet will be transformed into an inland harbor 683 MAIN ST. large enough to accommodate vessels of all sizes. The plans provide for a basin 1600 feet wide and 1800 feet ing and embracing, with connecting channels, an area of 473 acres.

Provision is made for 12 slips varying in length-from 1000 to 3200 feet, which will have an additional water area of 221 acres. The total length of water frontage is to be 13.7 miles, providing ample dockage for 125 600-foot

The street system will consist of a oadway completely surrounding the narbor area and of radial streets exending from the roadway to the haror basin at intervals or from onehalf to three-fourths of a mile apart. At the upper end of the harbor will be a plaza. The total cost of the project is estimated at $4,000,060.

Hence the only reasoning that counts is real on their wedding journey on horsereasoning on the basis of immortal Mind and its expression, without any jumping at human conclusions. To this Mind the divine idea is all that is ever present, and it is quite separate from the mirage of mortal imitations. "The preparations of the heart in man," as to citizenship and true policy, must indeed be from the Lord. Only as this is understood can one continue enthusiastically in any exigencies.

Fortunately, the one Life which is good is forever perfect, and can never be on the way to perdition. True Life with its fullness of expression is never at the mercy of political chicaneries or stunidities. It is not even made up of a series of human actions and reactions. True Life is spiritually conscious of infinite good. Carabinieri were lounging about the gate, and carriages were driving to the Pincian; but we rode on and up the street on the right of the piazza. When we had gone a short distance we asked a man at a corner our way to the Piazza di Spagna. We should have taken the street to our left, he said, but now we could reach it by crossing the Corso diagonally. As we did so we heard a loud sst, sst behind us, and we saw a gendarme running up the street; but we went on. When we wheeled into the Piazza di Spagna. however, a second, almost breathless, ran out in front of us, and cried, "Stop!" But still we rode. "Stop!" he cried again, and half drew his sword. In a minute we were surrounded Models came flying from the Spanish steps; an old countryman carrying a fish affectionately under his arm, bootblacks, clerks from the near shops, young Roman swells-all these and many more gathered about us.

"Stop!" the gendarme still cried. "Why?" we asked.

And then his fellow-officer, whom we had seen on the Corso, came up. "Get down!" he said in fierce tones of command.

"Why?" we asked again. . The crowd laughed with glee. Hackmen shouted their applause. It was ignominious, perhaps, but the wisest policy to get down and walk to our hotel.-From "An Italian Pilgrimage," by Joseph and Elizabeth Robins Pennell.

The San Francisco Nominations

THE nomination of James M. Cox, now serving his third term as Governor of the State of Ohio, to be the presidential candidate of the Democratic Party in the United States gives no opportunity for such assurance with respect to the possibilities involved in his selection as that which was so obvious in the Republican choice of Senator Harding. That is to say, while it would have been difficult for the Republicans to have named a man whose probable attitudes and performances could be more definitely prefigured than could the Senator's, there seems to be no great number of people who can speak with any assurance as to what Governor Cox may turn out to be or to do in the light of his new preferment. That he has been somewhat of a vote-getter is apparent from his experience in his own State. No other man has ever had three terms in the Governor's chair there except Rutherford B. Haves, who himself followed General Grant and preceded James A. Garfield in the national presidency. True, Governor Cox's first success in his gubernatorial aspirations came virtually as a legacy from the differences of the regular Republicans and the Progressives. But he had had two terms in Congress before that campaign, and after one defeat he held Ohio for the Democrats through two following terms. Like Senator Harding, he is a newspaper owner, and he has the newspaper man's facility in the discussion of public questions, particularly through the medium of writing. Like Governor Edwards of New Jersey, he was hailed throughout the pre-convention campaign as a pronounced sympathizer with the wets on the prohibition question. Just what his personal feelings on this matter would amount to, if he should be successful in his presidential aspirations, is therefore bound to be one of the leading questions for the

On the face of the matter, Governor Cox was severely tested when the wets, in the early days of the convention, sought to enlist him definitely and specifically on their side. If appearances are to be trusted, he disappointed them quite sharply at that time by declaring, in effect, that the liquor question should not be injected into the party platform, that whatever the law was it should be enforced, and that he personally would stand upon his Ohio record of law enforcement. That he thus took a fairly strong position, the outcome of the convention seems to make plain. There is no reason to doubt that this position would appear strong before the voters in about the same way that it appeared strong before the convention. The voters will have to determine for themselves whether to give more weight to Governor Cox's supposed sympathies with the liquor element, as set forth previous to the convention, or to the law enforcement doctrine which he himself has declared. That prohibition and its enforcement now constitute a part of the fundamental law of the country is without question, and the Ohio Governor's declaration should, by rights, mean nothing else than that he pledges himself to uphold the constitutional enactment against intoxicating liquor of every

Of course Governor Cox has not been known nationally to any such extent as the leading candidates whom he defeated have been known. He has been recognized in Ohio and at Washington as a politician among politicians. He has become well to do through his own efforts. He is a typical Ohio candidate in having risen to political preferment from early life on the farm, through school teaching and newspaper reporting. And his selection by the Democratic Party at San Francisco means that this year, for the first time, the presidential candidates of both great political parties will come from the same State, Ohio. No doubt this geographical consideration was a factor in his convention triumph. Certainly it guarantees a battle royal for possession of this great middle western State at election time, a battle for sectional supremacy between Republicans and Democrats that is likely to do more than a little to stimulate popular interest in a campaign that promises to be somewhat tame, in spite of the League of Nations issue.

So far as the candidate has expressed himself on the subject of the League, he appears to be generally in harmony with the Wilson view of it. He takes the League plan not as a perfect instrument but as a step in the right direction, capable of "doing more toward the restoration of normal conditions in six months' time than can the powers of the earth, acting independently, in ten years.' He is on record as declaring that, in case the decision of the matter should pass to the next Administration, there should be no fetish developed over past differences, but that, on the other hand, there must be no surrender of the vital idea. He is sound in his view that the pressing task with respect to the League is the getting started with it, and he recognizes that there is need for care that the start be made with an instrument that is worth while, and not a mere shadow.

Mr. Bryan, besides entertaining suspicions with respect to the wet sympathies of Governor Cox, declares that he lacks progressiveness and that he is "lined up with Wall Street." Certain it is that the Governor can hardly be accused of exhibiting any more pronounced tendencies toward radicalism than Senator Harding himself. Yet he has had his own methods of meeting radicalism, and he talks plausibly of the need of avoiding anything in the nature of governmental terrorism in dealing with aliens, if aliens in this country are ever to be induced to accept the typical American methods of getting what they want rather than to follow the methods of the Reds. He is for better school facilities in country districts as a means of preventing the drift cityward; he favors an official budget; he believes in doing away with the inheritance tax as soon as possible and in substituting a tax on volume of business in place of the excess profits

So far as now appears, the nominee is of the sort with whom the Democrats might be expected to make more headway in the east and middle of the country than in the west, where any doubts as to his views on the liquor question would naturally have the greater weight. As it is difficult to see how the selection of Franklin D. Roosevelt, another eastern man, for second place on the ticket, is going to strengthen the combination in making any western appeal, the question of immediate interest is as to whether the Democrats can now carry the country by virtually abandoning the west, and returning to their old campaign strategy; that is to say, by relying upon the solid south, and such central and eastern states as Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

- A Notable Suffrage Meeting

To those who recalled the tremendous struggles in the cause of woman suffrage in Great Britain, which characterized the years immediately preceding the war, there must have been something curiously significant about the great gathering of woman suffragists which recently assembled in London. It was a gathering the object of which was, according to one account, "to ratify and strengthen that bond of union which had been woven, bears before, when women fought so valiantly to gain their political freedom." But, whilst the spirit of the meeting was distinctly one of triumph, in practically every. speech there sounded the call to further action: "No individual woman," declared Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt at the women's international congress at Budapest in 1913, "is really free whilst there yet remains one woman, anywhere, who is being oppressed, exploited, or degraded." These words might be said to have been the watchword of the London gathering the other day.

This, however, did not prevent the meeting passing in review the great achievements of recent years. Thus, Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, in opening the meeting, asked het audience to look back on 1913, and note the great advance that had been made since then. At the time of the holding of the Budapest conference, women were enfranchised in fewer than five countries, none of which held first rank in power and influence. Since then, however, sixteen countries, including Great Britain, Russia, and Germany, had granted the vote to women, and, almost at any moment, they might hear the great news from across the Atlantic that, from one end of the United States of America to the other, women had gained their political freedom. But it was not, of course, only in the direction of the enfranchisement of women that the work of liberation was going on. Veil after veil of misunderstanding and error, fraught with material points of view, were, Mrs. Pethick Lawrence declared, being drawn away from within the women's movement, and "the spirit was burning its way through."

Not the least notable feature about the gathering was the fact that it was attended by representative woman suffragists from so many different countries. To them, the note of achievement and cooperation which pervaded the proceedings must have been a source of great encouragement., Each of these representatives in turn appealed to the generosity of Englishwomen, asking that they who had already gained the vote should extend to others a helping hand, thus hastening the day when the complete emancipation of women, in every country, should be accomplished. These appeals were amongst the most able speeches at the meeting, invariably setting forth lofty ideals, and never, at any point, exhibiting anything in the nature of what the opponents of woman's suffrage were wont to describe as sex antagonism. Indeed, the reverse was very much in evidence, the keynote of the speech of the representative from India, Mrs. Sarojine Naidu, being the necessity, indeed inevitableness, of ever fuller cooperation between men and women in the world's affairs. From every point of view, in fact, the way in which the past was reviewed and the future anticipated at this meeting in London was full of promise, not only for woman suffrage throughout the world, but for the emancipation of women generally, in the fullest meaning of that phrase.

North Dakota Case Significant

REMARKABLY little has been heard about the significance of the recent decision by the United States Supreme Court concerning North Dakota, outside the State, though no doubt enough has been heard inside it. But the Supreme Court's action in declining to interfere with the decisions of the Supreme Court of North Dakota, which had declared constitutional the series of state constitutional amendments and statutes enacted by the Nonpartisan League for the establishment and development by the State of various industrial and economic enterprises, seems to hold a deep political and economic meaning for the Nation. It is, naturally, of a character to be of the greatest interest to persons dissatisfied with the present economic and industrial system, and it is to be hoped that its full import will be perceived by all such elements in the country. For this decision by the highest court in the land plainly indicates that, in the United States, when a majority becomes convinced that conditions make it advisable for the State to manage, and even own, the facilities for caring for, preparing, and marketing what the people produce, and for financing essential enterprises. the present governmental machinery is elastic and expansive enough to admit of such methods. Time after time the public has been told this, but now the Supreme Court makes it clearly known, to all the world, that it sees no reason why it should undertake to prevent the people of a state of the Union attending to their own industrial and commercial business, if they would rather carry it on themselves, or through agencies of their own choosing, than leave it longer in the hands of individuals or corporations with whose service they are dissatisfied. This decision shows, beyond question, that in the United States there is absolutely no need of, or reason for, any such methods as "direct action," or physical violence, or the use of force in any form to bring about radical changes in the economic mode of living.

The political innovations in North Dakota during the last year or two have to do almost wholly with agricultural interests, for the population of the State is made up almost wholly of farmers and their families, there being few mechanical industries; but the political aspect of the situation is not essentially affected by this fact. It is no doubt true that, as has been said, the state Assembly last year gave to America its most radical experiments, thus far, in farmers' legislation. The State's undertaking to buy and make into flour the 150,000,000 bushels of wheat annually raised within its borders, to establish a state bank, this also to be a farm loan bank; to operate grain elevators and flour mills, and to carry on various other essential activities, entailing an expenditure of millions of dollars, quite naturally was not launched without opposition. But when the acts of . the Assembly, placing such enterprises on a public footing, were attacked by groups of citizens who claimed that to raise taxes for such purposes was unconstitutional, those legislative acts were sustained by a substantial majority in a special referendum vote. The right of the State to engage in industry was challenged in the courts, while much was made of the claim that the purposes for which these public funds were to be expended were private purposes, and that the State was without authority, under the national Constitution, to incur indebtedness for any but public purposes. The United States Supreme Court, however, decided that it did not come within the purview of that court to examine the economic aspects of the program modeled by the Nonpartisan League, and that the question of constitutionality of the state taxes complained of hung on the state Constitution and the statutes already sustained by the highest courts of the State.

Thus the people of North Dakota are more than ever consciously free to go forward with their economic experiments. How these experiments will succeed no one can yet say, and the question of their soundness is not at this moment under consideration. The point which it is desired to emphasize at this time is that the citizens of North Dakota find themselves at liberty to work out their economic salvation according to their own ideas, radical though these ideas may be, and according to the people's courage to venture in untried paths. If it is true, as has been claimed, that the causes of unrest are being removed in North Dakota, and that the dissatisfied there now are mostly "wealthy anarchists," speculators, and exploiters of the farmers, there is at least something to be said, already, for these experiments in government.

The Commodore

Nor the least interesting feature of the recent International Horse Show at Olympia, in London, was, it may be ventured, the parade of old carriages which took place at each session. No fewer than twenty-six ancient vehicles of varied types had a place in the procession, from gigs to the mail coaches, which, a hundred years or so ago, were wont to take the road from London to York and to many other points, the compass round. In this latter class undoubtedly the most popular participant was The Commodore, the veritable London-to-Rochester coach in which, on that memorable morning, "the thirteenth of May, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven," Mr. Pickwick and other members of the Pickwick Club set out on their first journey of speculation and inquiry.

Now it is true that The Commodore, as it lumbered round the course at Olympia with Tony Weller on the box seat and Pickwick, Snodgrass, Tupman, Winkle, and Alfred Jingle as passengers, probably made the acquaintance of these worthies for the first time. And yet, it is safe to say that, whilst all the authentic history of The Commodore may be lost, it will never cease to be famous by reason of the wholly imaginary incident that Dickens has woven around it. For indeed with the very mention of the word Commodore, the story of the memorable journey of the members of the Pickwick Club to Rochester is straightway gratefully recalled by those who know "Pickwick." Once again, they see the worthy Samuel throw open his chamber window, on that morning in May, and look out on Goswell Street. "Goswell-street was at his feet, Goswell-street was on his right hand—as far as the eye could reach, Goswell-street extended on the left; and the opposite side of Goswellstreet was over the way." Once again, they hear him philosophizing, inveighing against the narrow views of those philosophers who are content with examining the things that are before them. It is the same as if they were content to look out forever on Goswell-street, "without making any attempt to penetrate the hidden countries which, on every side, surround it."

And so they see Mr. Pickwick clutch his portmanteau. thrust his telescope into his greatcoat pocket, his notebook into his waistcoat pocket, and take his way toward the coach stand in Saint Martin's-le-Grand. It is all precious history now. First, there is the cabby, he of the sackcloth coat and apron of the same, of the brass label and of the never-to-be-forgotten horse. Then there is the drive to the Golden Cross, the cabby all conversation, pouring out the most wonderful stories as to the peculiarities of the horse, and Mr. Pickwick, notebook in hand, jotting it all down from time to time. And so on to the arrival at the Golden Cross, the regrettable incident in which the cabby figured so violently and so discreditably, the timely intervention of the "tall thin young man in a green coat," the reestablishment of peace, and the entrance of the Rochester coachman to announce that "The Commodore was on the point of starting."

So does the story delightfully unfold itself once more. And who that does not feel grateful to see Mr. Pickwick and his admiring friends, to say nothing of the loquacious stranger, all packed away comfortably on the back seat of the coach, ducking their heads as they drive under the low gateway of the Golden Cross, and swing off, down Whitehall, on the way to Rochester? Then hear the loquacious stranger: "'Philosopher, Sir?' 'An observer of human nature, Sir,' said Mr. Pickwick. 'Ah, so am I. Most people are when they've little to do and less to get. Poet, Sir?' 'My' friend Mr. Snodgrass has a strong poetic turn,' said Mr. Pickwick. 'So have

I,' said the stranger. 'Epic poem—10,000 lines—revolution in July—composed it on the spot—Mars by day. Apollo by night—bang the field-piece, twang the lyre.' So it goes on all the way to Rochester, the loquacious stranger ever more loquacious, Mr. Pickwick ever ready with the notebook, Tupman, Snodgrass, and Winkle eager and appreciative listeners, every now and again bearing their share of the conversation, "until they reached the Bull Inn, in the High Street, where the coach stopped."

Editorial Notes

CAN Bolshevism, like beauty, of a sort, be called skindeep? The amusing inconsistency of Leonid Krassin, the Soviets' trade delegate to Great Britain, in matters domestic, has no doubt raised some speculations on this subject. Mr. Krassin, according to the statement of Robert Wale, a released British prisoner from Russia, before a London audience, recently lost his home, goods and furniture in Russia, which were seized by the authorities. This was in keeping with the generally accepted ideas of Bolshevism, and therefore afforded no cause for particular comment. But no sooner does Mr. Krassin set foot in London than he rents a palatial flat in Mayfair, paying, it is aid, the princely sum of 22 guineas a week, One result of this Gilbertian situation is its peculiar effect upon the opponents of the Krassin-Lloyd George discussions. The dissentients were prepared with copious ridicule for the spectacle of the Prime Minister negotiating with a penurious representative from the Lenine stronghold. They have now taken refuge in sternly denouncing the reckless extravagance of the Bolshevist delegate in his extraordinary selection

WHETHER the motion-picture producer who recently announced, in a London paper, his determination to eliminate bad grammar and "stars" from his films will succeed in this ambitious design remains to be seen. As for the defect of bad grammar, the prospects of improvement would seem to be reasonably hopeful. At any rate, since, as the producer himself says, "much of the English used to describe the action of the film is intolerable," he is making arrangements for the author of the scenario to write, or at least revise, the written matter that appears in the film. The elimination of the "stars," judging from a casual examination of motion-picture billboards, will not be quite so easy, although it is satisfactory to learn from the producer that "every one was getting a little tired of the film that was written around a prominent performer."

CHARLES DICKENS is read as much today as at any time during the last fifty years, it is said, and Mr. C. K. Chesterton tells us why. It has been the fashion to describe the author of "Bleak House" and "Little Dorrit" as a satirist of a society passed and gone, whereas Mr. Chesterton shows he is the satirist of a society that is decidedly of the present. The trouble, Mr. Chesterton says, is not that Dickens' world is not like our world, it is that our world is a great deal too like his world. If we differ at all, so to speak, it is by being the same, only more so. The fact is that Dickens was fighting forces newly come to the surface, which have not been given their congé since his day, and it is well to remember that Dickens was a satirist because he was sane, because he was simple, because he was concerned for very simple things.

One more step in the business of organization is noted in the formation of the Montreal Wholesale Milliners Association. This will undoubtedly safeguard the wholesalers' interests. Retail trade associations are so common that there is no likelihood of the retailers' interests being overlooked. As for the man or woman who makes the hat, look inside the band of a soft felt or on the rim of a white "straw," examine the "union made" label, and draw your own conclusions. Every one seems to be safeguarded but the person who wears the hat. He or she pays the higher profit demanded by the manufacturer and the increased wage called for by the worker. It is easy to see where the next step may lead. Why not a hat-wearers' union?

CONTINUED and conflicting reports from Cuba would seem to indicate that there is some truth in the stories that all is not going well with the speculators in sugar. First comes word that a combination is formed to hold out for 24 cents a pound, which is followed, almost immediately with a "feeler" to the effect that the pool is said to have offered the United States Government 640,000,000 pounds of sugar at 20 cents a pound. Consumers at a distance may chuckle as they recall that wherever there is a plenteous supply of sweets there gather the bees, and, should there be any great commotion around the sugar-barrel, the bees often resort to other things than gathering honey.

Appreciation of the fact that every one ought to do his individual part to make successful the democratic form of government appears to be growing among various organizations that have had tremendous possibilities, yet heretofore have perhaps held somewhat aloof. In the National Education Association convention a resolution has now been presented recommending the removal from school textbooks of any passages tending to extol "glory" in connection with war. What the schools teach is, of course, a powerful factor in molding the future of the world, and may hasten the day when a League of Nations will be better understood and operated than at the present time.

SEVERAL presidents and former presidents of American universities have accepted the invitation of the Massachusetts Pilgrim Tercentenary Committee to act as an education subcommittee. In order that the tercentenary may be duly observed, this subcommittee is to bring all the resources of its combined culture and prestige into the service of the Commonwealth, and of the United States, free. All of which may cause the heads of some commercial interests, who have to pay large salaries for publicity experts, to give vent to deep sighs.
